Pastor Jared Fabac never planned to write a leadership book. He planned to be a pastor. But 20 years of executive leadership across church, business, and community kept teaching him the same lesson from three different angles. The problems people call theological, financial, or organizational are almost always cultural. And most leaders have no repeatable practice for building the culture they want.

So he built one. Over two decades, Fabac gathered, tested, and refined the practices that actually worked with real teams. The Grace and Truth Matrix for hard conversations. A Peace Index for measuring team health. A Change Compass for navigating transitions. Path, Plan, Pledge. S.T.E.P. Goals. C.O.R.E. Feedback. Modeling and Multiplication. The Coaching Pathway. Each one was refined in real staff meetings, board rooms, and family conversations before it made the final list. Along the way he became certified through the John Maxwell Team as a Speaker, Trainer, and Coach, and through GiANT Worldwide as an Executive Coach.

Before publishing, Fabac commissioned the Culture Resurrection Index, a 1,000-respondent field survey of pastors, executives, and parents, to confirm the eight frameworks addressed the real pain points those leaders face. The CRI findings are not included in the book. They are the reason the book takes the shape it does.
